

GP in Rudersberg/D

If there was a bit more luck...

All's well that ends well. Concerning the conditions of the World Championship final in Rudersberg (near Stuttgart), the venerable saying fitted perfectly. First-class track preparation and a huge crowd provided a superb finale of the twelve-part world series.

The British-German duo team Dan Foden/Noah Weinmann put on a solid performance. Even if the results of the 26- and 21-year-old offroaders didn't reflect their potential once again. In the first race, the pair tangled with a competitor in the first turn and had to fight their way from midpack to fourth place in the 30-minute race.

In the second heat, everything seemed to finally be going according to plan. After a successful start, the duo was able to follow the newly crowned world champions Vanluchene/van den Boogart in second place. However, this time the chance for a podium finish was ruined by mechanical issues at midrace. With the gearbox stuck in fourth, the unlucky pair managed to finish again in fourth place.

Fate gets its last chance for redemption next weekend. At the Sidecarcross of Nations in France, the mixed couple will compete for the british team.
